People have been sending greeting cards for years. Why don't you make yours stand out by sending a different kind of greeting card? Pandigital (<http://www.pandigital.net>) just announced the new Digital Photo Greeting Card line that actually has a built-in LCD that can show digital photos.

The Digital Photo Greeting Card is easy to use. Each card comes preloaded with photo-transfer software that is both Mac and PC compatible. Simply connect the card's mini USB jack to your computer and follow the steps to select the photos you want to share on the card. The cards accept JPEG, GIF and BMP photo formats. Up to 50 digital photos can be loaded onto the card and viewed as a slideshow on the 1.44-inch digital photo screen. The card turns on and off as the card opens and closes, and if left open it will automatically turn off after five minutes. Also, the recipient of the card can save the photos to their own computer.

Pandigital Digital Photo Greeting Cards are available in selection of styles and designs including love, thinking of you, anniversaries, congratulations, birthdays, happy holidays, and more.

The Pandigital Digital Photo Greeting Card has an MSRP of $9.99 each and is available now at various retail locations.
